No. 1 ranked Iowa, returning All-Americans look to continue what they hoped to show at the canceled 2020 tournament

By Mike Finn

March 12, 2020 will always be a date that will live in infamy for much of the American sports scene, including NCAA Division I wrestling. That was the Thursday that the NCAA announced the 2020 Division I Wrestling Championships in Minneapolis, Minneapolis — scheduled to start a week later — was cancelled because of the impact of the worldwide COVID-19 pandemic.

While much of the focus was on how high of an attendance record would be set at the 88th all-time national tournament in U.S. Bank Stadium — the NFL stadium of the Minnesota Vikings — one couldn't help but think of the athletes who became the first college wrestlers since World War II to see their nationals cancelled.

Among those were 97 seniors out of the 330 national qualifiers of 2020, who saw their final chances at winning an NCAA title — including three-time All-Americans like Princeton's Matt Kolodzik (149), Ohio State's Kollin Moore (197) shooting for their first and returning NCAA champs like Penn State's Vincenzo Joseph (165) and Mark Hall (174) — come to an end as they were unable to complete their careers on the mat.

There was a two-time defending champ in Iowa junior Spencer Lee (125) who it appeared would not get a chance to join the elite group of four-time NCAA Division I champions: Oklahoma State's Pat Smith (1994), Iowa State's Cael Sanderson (2001), Cornell's Kyle Dake (2013) and Ohio State's Logan Stieber.

The Hawkeye had even bigger goals in 2019-20 when the former Junior World freestyle champion — who did not take an Olympic redshirt while winning a U.S. Open championship in December of 2019 — had other goals in mind last year: leading his top-ranked and Big Ten championship Iowa wrestling team to the school's 24th all-time NCAA team championship and first since 2010.

Of course that did not happen in March of 2020, when the NCAA first considered continuing the event with extremely limited fans a day earlier, then cancelled it after many other American sports put an end to their seasons around that time.

"Our coaching staff is disappointed for our guys, their families, and our fans," said Iowa coach Tom Brands, after the announcement. "I understand the Big Ten Conference and NCAA made decisions based on information available and are acting in what they believe is in the best interest of the student-athletes. We will process this and move forward, as we always do. Our guys have a lot to be proud of and much more still to accomplish."

Eventually other events, including the 2020 Olympics in Tokyo, were either postponed or cancelled ... and many wondered if there would be a college season in 2020-21 as the pandemic — which led to more than a half-million deaths in a year — put a halt on the early November start of this college wrestling season.

The coronavirus impact also cancelled the 2020-21 winter season for the six Ivy League wrestling programs, including Cornell, which featured another two-time champion in junior Yianni Diakomihalis and three other returning All-Americans, and Princeton, which won its first Ivy League regular-season championship since 1986 in 2020.

Fortunately, schools started announcing in December of 2020 that there would indeed be a season, starting on Jan. 1, 2021, that would be a two-month dual season before the start of a post-season. There also would be a limit to the number of fans who normally would pack some of those college arenas.

For many of the top programs, there would be COVID pauses to their seasons, as Penn State missed its first two weekend duals, the entire Michigan athletics department was forced to shut down for three weeks and Iowa did not wrestle between Feb. 7 and the start of the March 6-7 Big Ten Championships because of COVID protocol.

This also meant college wrestlers would compete in the fewest number of matches in a season since the 1950s. It was difficult to determine who might end up in St. Louis, as many of the top wrestlers, like Oklahoma State's Daton Fix and Northwestern's Ryan Deakin, past All-Americans who earned No. 1 seeds in St. Louis, did not start competing until mid-February.

The majority of elite wrestlers never met during the regular season. According to WIN Magazine, the top 10-ranked wrestlers at all 10 weights combined to wrestle just 101 bouts against other top 10 wrestlers heading into this national tournament. That was one-third of such elite match-ups (254) that took place a year earlier.

Despite all of these issues, every conference was able to complete its NCAA-qualifying tournament, and Lee and his Hawkeye teammates are now the team to beat at the Enterprise Center March 18-20.

Lee still has a chance to win four NCAA titles — after the NCAA announced last October that all athletes would not lose a year of eligibility in 2020-21 — as the 2020 WIN Magazine/Culture House Hodge Trophy winner dominated his competition this season. Not one foe has gone the distance against the 2021 Big Ten champ, who has pinned five of his eight victims, getting tech falls in the other three bouts.

“No matter what’s going on in the world, you control what you can control,” Lee said. “We’re ready to go, and it doesn’t matter what’s coming after us. We’re going to do our best.”

Iowa coach Tom Brands welcomed back this season nearly his entire NCAA-qualifying lineup that won a second straight Big Ten championship. That includes six returning 2019 All-Americans in Lee, Austin DeSanto (133), Kaleb Young (157), Alex Marinelli (165), Michael Kemerer (174) and Jacob Warner (197). The Hawkeyes also added 141-pound Jaydin Eierman, the past three-time All-American from Missouri, who transferred to Iowa City last season and recently added a Big Ten championship. Lee, Eierman, Marinelli and Kemerer are all seeded No. 1 at their weight classes in St. Louis.

Throughout this process, Brands has continued to be sensitive to the protocol placed on his program, but also believes his team and others will overcome the setbacks caused by COVID.

“I think wrestlers get ready to wrestle when it’s time to wrestle,” said Brands. “If the date gets changed, it gets changed. There’s not going to be competition every weekend. As we’ve talked to our guys, uncertainty is part of the conversation. Be ready for anything, and be ready for cancellation.

“You’re a wrestler who does it for the love of the sport first, for self-satisfaction, the glory of God and all those things. We’re going to St. Louis. And that’s really where their heads are. That’s where my head is ... we’re going to get the recognition we earn based on our performance. That is a timeless principle and a principle that is proven correct.”

But don’t expect any other team will concede team honors to the Hawkeyes, especially Penn State, which had won the previous four team championships ... and eight titles over nine years, prior to the 2020 cancelled tournament.

Nittany Lion coach Cael Sanderson welcomes back 2019 All-Americans in junior Roman Bravo-Young (133) and senior Nick Lee (141), and true sophomore Aaron Brooks, who will be seeded No. 1 at 184 pounds after winning a second straight Big Ten championship.

Penn State, which finished second in the 2021 Big Tens, is also one of many programs that have benefited from utilizing freshmen, as five of the national qualifiers are new to the program: Robbie Howard (125), Joe Lee (165), Carter Starocci (174), Michael Beard (197) and Greg Kerkvliet (285). Starocci is coming off a second-place finish at the Big Tens.

“Our mindset was just getting everyone through (to the NAAs) and prepare for the national tournament,” Sanderson said. “It’s about trying to learn and get better every week. I think this has been a unique season, and the experiences we got at the Big 10 Championship were very valuable for them.

“I think it’s important for every program to have freshmen like this, and it’s one of the reasons we’ve been successful.”

The 2021 national qualifying field features 51 freshmen, including 26 true freshmen, who have a chance to win five national championships or All-American honors in their careers since this year’s results will not count against their eligibility.

Among the notable rookies is Oklahoma State’s true freshman A.J. Ferrari and Missouri’s Keegan O’Toole.

Ferrari is a former prep All-American from Allen, Texas, who recently became the 13th all-time Cowboy to win a conference championship as a true freshman and earned a No. 4 national seed. His Big 12 title also helped Oklahoma State capture a ninth straight conference team title in 2021, which it shared with Bedlam rival Oklahoma.

O’Toole is a former four-time state champ and was WIN’s 2020 Junior Hodge Trophy winner from Arrowhead High School in Hartland, Wisconsin, where he was trained by former Missouri NCAA champs Ben and Max Askren. He also was part of a 2021 Missouri team that won a 10th straight Mid-American Conference championship and is sending all 10 wrestlers to St. Louis.

Meanwhile, other teams who will be in the hunt for team trophies are Arizona State and NC State, team champions of the Pac-12 and ACC ... each with individuals who have big goals set for the Arch City.

For example, the Sun Devils feature the likes of senior Anthony Valencia, the brother of ASU’s two-time NCAA champ Zahid Valencia, who is shooting for his first All-American honor. And the Wolfpack feature a pair of brothers in Hayden and Trent Hilday — who are both seeded No. 2 at 157 and 184 — and Daniel and Thomas Bullard at 165 and 174.

There are numerous high-profile individuals and storylines in the individual weights. One is Virginia Tech’s Mekhi Lewis, the 2019 NCAA champ at 165 pounds, who took an Olympic redshirt last winter and has been beset by injuries this season.

Many of these wrestlers would also like to challenge Lee when it comes to winning the 2021 Dan Hodge Trophy.

Lee’s biggest challenge could come from Minnesota heavyweight Gable Steveson, a third-place NCAA finisher in 2019 who recently dominated the Big Tens for his second conference title.

“I think I showed a lot of critics I can compete at a high level and I can go for a seven-minute match and be dominant,” Steveson said. “I’m not the best wrestler in the country, but still want to prove that. Lee is the best and shown he’s a fierce competitor.”

Lee said that the Gopher is “crazy” about calling him the best “pound-for-pound” wrestler, but would love to wrestle with Steveson someday at a World or Olympic championship since both wrestlers have won multiple age-group World titles in the past. They likely also will be among several collegians trying to make the 2021 Olympics at the April 2-3 Olympic Trials in Fort Worth, Texas.

“Maybe we’ll make a team together,” Lee said. “I’m obviously cheering for my teammates first.”

After a year of going through so much uncertainty and waiting for another chance at NCAA stardom, it’s time to focus on the present, finish business and celebrate the top collegians who are finally getting their chance to battle it out for NCAA Division I All-American honors.

Weight Class Preview

Spencer Lee had high hopes of becoming his school's first four-time NCAA champ when he left Murrysville, Pennsylvania, for Iowa City, Iowa, but that was jeopardized when COVID-19 cancelled last year's NCAAAs where the Hawkeye was seeded No. 1. Thanks to the NCAA's announcement that this year's tournament will not impact a wrestler's eligibility, the two-time champ will be given an extra year and has a good chance of collecting a third title this year, and if he wins it, could get a shot at a fourth next season in Detroit.

That's because the 2020 Dan Hodge Trophy winner has won 30 straight matches since his last loss in the 2019 Big Ten finals, and the Hawkeye has simply dominated his competition, outscoring his foes 373-34, and scoring bonus points in 86% (26) of bouts in his winning streak. None of his seven opponents have gone the distance this winter. Even after giving a rare takedown to Purdue's Devin Schroder in the 2021 Big Ten final, the Hawkeye still won by a technical fall.

One question is what other wrestler will be good enough to make an upset bid against Lee in St. Louis?

In addition to Schroder, who claimed a second straight Big Ten runner-up spot after entering the 2021 Big Tens as a No. 7 seed and hopes to become Purdue's first All-American since 2005, there is only one other returning All-American in addition to Lee:

Michigan State's Rayvon Foley, who finished seventh in the 2019 NCAAAs and was third in the 2021 Big Tens. Lee pinned the Spartan in 23 seconds at the conference meet.

Meanwhile, Central Michigan's Drew Hildebrandt just won a second MAC championship, was a No. 6 seed in the 2020 NCAAAs and is shooting for his first All-American honor. Another 125-pounder with NCAA experience is Ohio State's Malik Heinselman, who finished fourth at the recent Big Tens.

There are three notable wrestlers making their first trip to nationals. One is a transfer — Northern Iowa's 2021 Big 12 champ Brody Teske (after competing at Penn State) — while the other two are ACC rivals: Virginia Tech's redshirt freshman Sam Latona and NC State's Jakob Camacho. Latona defeated Camacho in two close bouts this year.

Weight Class Preview

The last time most wrestling fans saw Oklahoma State's Daton Fix compete on a college mat was the 2019 NCAA finals, when the Cowboy lost an overtime bout to Rutgers' Nick Suriano. Since then, Fix built off that disappointment, most of the time competing in freestyle, including the summer of 2019 when he qualified to represent the USA at the World Championships, where he split two matches.

After taking an Olympic redshirt in 2020, the native of Sand Springs, Oklahoma, finally returned to the college mat on Valentine's Day 2021 and will enter just his second national tournament with an 8-0 record and fresh off winning a second Big 12 Championship. He's the man to beat at 133.

Big Ten champion Roman Bravo-Young appears to be Fix's biggest challenger, as the two-time All-American and native of Tucson, Arizona, enters with a 9-0 record. The Nittany Lion junior edged Iowa's Austin DeSanto, 2-1, in the recent Big Ten final. The Hawkeye, who placed fifth in the 2019 NCAA's after transferring from Drexel, enters his third national tournament with an 8-1 mark this winter with five bonus wins.

who started their career elsewhere before representing their schools in St. Louis: Virginia Tech's Korbin Myers (Edinboro), Pitt's Micky Phillippi (Virginia), Arizona State's Michael McGee (Old Dominion) and Missouri's Matt Schmitt (West Virginia).

Myers recently claimed his first ACC title to go along with two Eastern Wrestling League championships and has posted a 4-6 record in three NCAA's. Phillippi, who finished second behind the Hokie, split two matches at the 2019 NCAA's in his first season with the Panthers. McGee recently won a Pac-12 title after Old Dominion dropped its program last spring. The Sun Devil has competed in two NCAA's and was within one victory of an All-American honor in 2019. Schmitt competed in two NCAA's with West Virginia before the Missouri native returned to his home state to complete his career.

Speaking of transfers, there are four other wrestlers

Weight Class Preview

Iowa's Jaydin Eierman had already earned three All-American honors, including third place in 2019, while wrestling for his hometown Missouri Tigers. But the senior wanted a change, which was why he transferred to Iowa City a year ago while taking an Olympic redshirt. This winter, Eierman enters the NCAAAs as a No. 1 seed with an 8-0 record (three wins by fall) after he won his first Big Ten championship.

Eierman emerged from a conference tournament with three other talented wrestlers who were all seeded among the top six wrestlers in the cancelled 2020 NCAAAs.

One is Penn State's two-time All-American (fifth in both 2018 and '19) Nick Lee who lost just 6-5 to the Hawkeye in the Big Ten final. Before that the Nittany Lion emerged from an incredibly dramatic win over Rutgers' Sebastian Rivera. The Scarlet Knight senior is closing out his college career after transferring from Northwestern, where he earned two All-American honors in 2018 (sixth) and '19 (third) at 125 pounds. Rivera is also coming off a third-place Big Ten victory over Nebraska's Chad Red. The Cornhusker enters this third nationals after placing seventh in 2018 and eighth in 2019.

What's also notable about Red was that he was unseeded in 2018. The same can be said of NC State's 2021 ACC champ Tariq Wilson, who nearly reached the finals at 133 pounds that March — before losing in overtime to eventual NCAA champ Seth Gross — and claimed third place.

The Big 12 is sending a pair of wrestlers who were separated by a couple points in overtime, Oklahoma's Dom Demas edging Iowa State's Ian Parker. The Sooner also qualified for the 2019 NCAAAs as a freshman, finishing fourth nationally. The Cyclone qualified for the NCAAAs two years ago as well and was seeded No. 4 in the 2020 NCAAAs after claiming a Big 12 championship a year ago.

Weight Class Preview

WIN Magazine's first Dan Hodge Trophy was presented in 1995 to North Carolina's T.J. Jaworsky, who also happens to be the last Tar Heel to win an individual championship. Now more than 25 years later, Austin O'Connor would like to add his name to at least one of those lists as the native of Illinois has won 67 of 74 bouts in his three-year college career. A few of those victories helped O'Connor claim third place in 2019, and he was a No. 2 seed in the 2020 nationals.

Meanwhile, Ohio State sophomore Sammy Sasso would love to win a national title for the Buckeyes, especially after he claimed a Big Ten championship one year after he settled for second in 2020 in the conference and was seeded No. 3 at the NAAs.

Three other All-Americans also return, including Missouri's Brock Mauller and Oklahoma State's Boo Lewallen, who each claimed MAC and Big 12 championships, respectively, in the past few weeks. The pair were also seeded No. 4 and 5, respectively, in the 2020 NAAs, after the Tiger claimed sixth as a freshman in 2019 and the Cowboy finished eighth in 2018.

The Big 12 has another talented wrestler to note in Oklahoma's Mitch Moore, who recently placed second at the conference meet. The Sooner started his career at Virginia Tech, where he was a two-time national qualifier and was named the ACC Freshman of the Year in 2019.

The wrestler who took over the former Hokie's spot in the lineup is sophomore Bryce Andonian, an Ohio native, who qualified for his second national tournament by finishing second at the ACCs for a second straight season, losing just 10-8 to the top-ranked O'Connor in the 2021 final.

Meanwhile, Appalachian State has featured eight NCAA Division I All-Americans in the North Carolina school's history, and junior Jonathan Millner would love to become the Mountaineers' first since 2017 (Denzel Dejournette). The native of Greensboro, North Carolina, was recently one of five ASU wrestlers to win a Southern Conference championship.

Weight Class Preview

Northwestern's Ryan Deakin has already placed in one of two NAAs, finishing sixth in 2019. But the Colorado native was a lot different wrestler then compared to the current powerhouse Wildcat. In the past two years, Deakin has emerged as a favorite to win the NAAs after winning the past two Big Ten championships, including 2021 when he outscored three foes by a combined 28-1. The former Junior World silver medalist also hopes to excel on the freestyle mat after winning a 2019 U.S. Open title.

Ready to challenge Deakin are two wrestlers — NC State's Hayden Hidlay and Iowa State's David Carr — who also are coming off conference championships.

Three years ago, Hidlay turned in quite an impressive freshman campaign, the native of Pennsylvania winning his first 26 bouts before losing to Penn State's Jason Nolf in the NAA final ... and Hidlay added a fourth-place national finish in 2019 before his No. 2 seeding as ACC champ in 2020.

Carr, the two-time Big 12 champ, hopes to duplicate what his father, Nate (a three-time NAA champ) did at Iowa State. In less than two years, the former five-time state of Ohio champion has won 34 of 35 matches for the Cyclones, who are looking for their first NAA championship since Kyven Gadson in 2015.

The only other returning All-American is Iowa's Kaleb Young, who twice defeated Deakin in overtime at the 2019 NAAs, where the Hawkeye placed fifth, but came up short against the Wildcat in this year's Big Ten final.

Meanwhile, Rider's Jesse Dellavecchia hopes to become his school's 15th all-time All-American ... and perhaps the New Jersey school's first national champion. The Bronco has won the last two MAC championships and has won 37 of his last 39 college bouts.

The Big 12 has several other wrestlers of note, including Oklahoma's Justin Thomas, who was within one victory of earning All-American honors in 2019. The other is North Dakota State's Jared Franek, who beat Thomas in overtime at the recent Big 12s before settling for second behind Carr in the final.

Weight Class Preview

Iowa's Alex Marinelli has won three Big Ten championships in his career, but perhaps no 2021 NCAA wrestler is more hungry to compete in this year's national tournament than this Ohio native. That's because the NCAAAs have been tough for the Hawkeye senior, who settled for sixth and seventh place, respectively, in 2018 and '19 when he was seeded No. 5 and No. 1. This year, Marinelli only wrestled two matches before the Big Tens because of Iowa's month-long COVID-pause, but he still won another Big Ten crown.

Another wrestler who is also hungry for All-American success is Arizona State's Anthony Valencia, who recently won a fourth Pac-12 championship. Unfortunately, the Sun Devil — and brother to ASU's former two-time champ Zahid Valencia — has yet to place at his two national tournaments in 2017 and '18.

Virginia Tech's Mekhi Lewis proved to be the biggest thorn in Marinelli's side in 2019 when, as a No. 8 seed and a true freshman, he upset the Hawkeye in the quarterfinals and eventually beat Penn State's two-time national champ Vincenzo Joseph for a national title. The Hokie chose to take an Olympic redshirt in 2020 and has not been healthy this winter, including at the 2021 ACCs where he was forced to injury default.

Another upperclassman looking to end his career on a high note after some past disappointment is Pitt senior Jake Wentzel. After compiling an average 22-19 mark his first two seasons, the Panther earned a No. 11 seed in the 2020 NCAAAs and was beating Tech's Lewis 4-0 before Lewis took an injury default in the 2021 regular season.

There are also several young and talented wrestlers at this weight, including two sophomores who were seeded No. 3 and 4 in 2020: Stanford's Shane Griffith and Oklahoma State's Travis Wittlake. The Cardinal won his first 34 matches in his career before falling to Valencia in the recent Pac 12 finals, while the Cowboy was 40-2 and ranked as high as No. 2 this winter before getting upset in the Big 12s.

Meanwhile, Missouri's true freshman Keegan O'Toole, who trained with the Tigers' champions Ben and Max Askren in his native Wisconsin and was named WIN's 2020 Junior Dan Hodge Trophy winner as the top prep in the U.S., hopes to match the Askrens' winning ways at the nationals in his first championships.

Weight Class Preview

Is Iowa's Michael Kemerer the same man who came to Iowa as a former Pennsylvania state champ from Franklin Regional, where he wrestled at 106, 126, 138 and 145 pounds before eventually claiming two All-American honors at 157 pounds ... and now hoping to win his first NCAA title at 174 pounds?

Yes, the 24-year-old Hawkeye has come a long way, and is the man to beat at this weight in St. Louis after winning a Big Ten championship. Since placing third and fourth in 2017 and '18, Kemerer — who took a medical hardship in 2019 — has 22 of his 82 career victories since moving up to 174 in 2020 when he was seeded No. 2 at the cancelled NCAAs.

The biggest challenge to Kemerer in 2021 could come from fellow Big Ten wrestlers, including Michigan senior Logan Massa, who claimed third place as a freshman in 2017 and is finally healthy again after injuries slowed his career. Meanwhile, Nebraska's Mike Labriola, who finished sixth nationally in 2019, appeared ready for the 2021 Big Ten final, but was upset by Penn State redshirt freshman Carter Starocci, who also upset Massa during the regular season. The Nittany Lion was a two-time

Meanwhile, a couple wrestlers with the same last name are not related but hope to stir up things in St. Louis. One is Utah Valley's Demetrius Romero, who started his career at Boise State and suffered a season-ending injury in 2020 before returning to win a Pac-12 championship this winter. Meanwhile, Ohio State's Kaleb Romero — who earned a No. 6 seed in 2020 — is coming off a fifth-place finish at the Big Tens.

NC State senior Daniel Bullard, one of two twin siblings from the state of Georgia, is coming off an ACC championship.

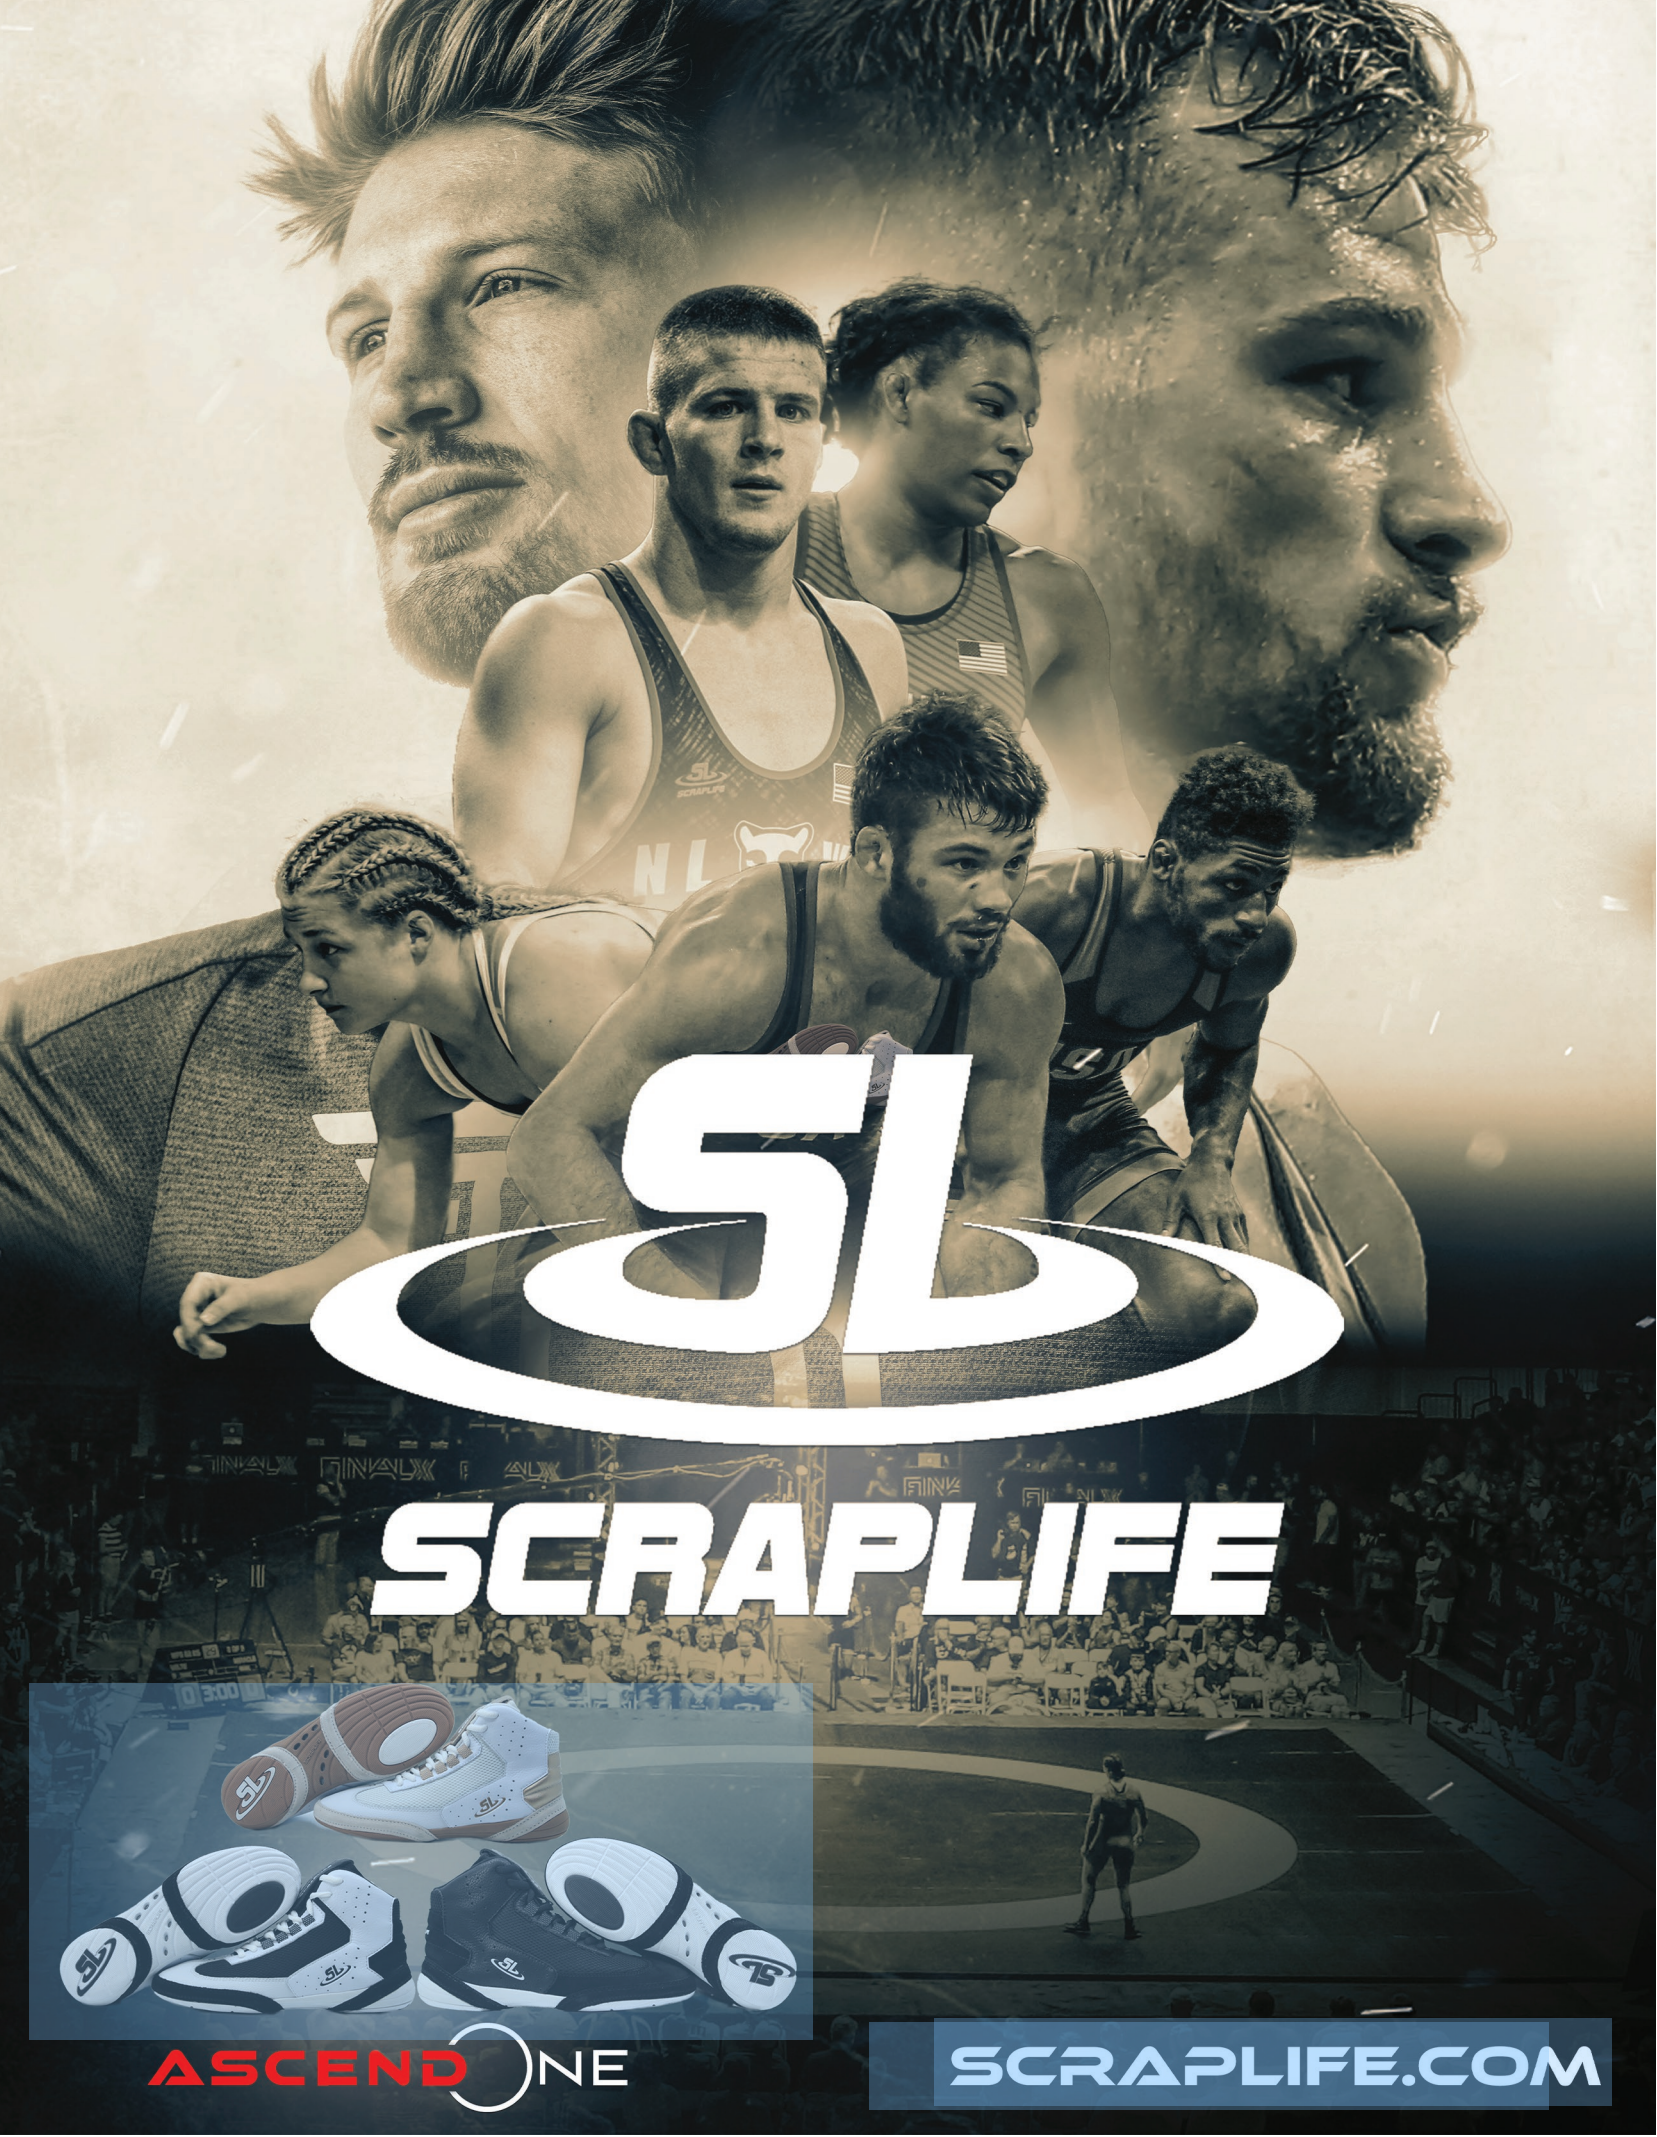

Cal Poly, which has not featured an All-American in wrestling since 2012 (Boris Novachkov, 141, and Ryan DesRoches, 174), brings a Pac-12 champion in sophomore Bernie Truax to the NCAAs. The Mustang competed at 165 pounds a year ago when he was seeded No. 29.

Weight Class Preview

Two years ago, Aaron Brooks spent a year training at the Olympic Training Center after he won Maryland state championships for North Hagerstown High School and four National High School Coaches Association Nationals crowns. Fast forward to the 2021 NAAs, the Nittany Lion is a true sophomore with two Big Ten championships after Penn State removed his redshirt midway through the 2019-20 season, and will be the No. 1 seed in St. Louis.

But perhaps no weight class is more wide open than 184 pounds, where several could challenge Brooks. Among those are Virginia Tech junior Hunter Bolen, who was seeded No. 2 in the 2020 NAAs and was also ranked No. 1 prior to the ACC Championships. But that's where NC State sophomore Trent Hidlay — the brother of 157-pound All-American Hayden Hidlay — avenged an earlier regular season loss to the Hokie to beat Bolen for a conference championship.

Meanwhile, Northern Iowa's Parker Keckeisen — a redshirt freshman from Wisconsin — is coming off a Big 12 championship and is quick to remind others that a pair of former UNI wrestlers claimed a title in 2019 and Taylor Lujan, seeded No. 1 in 2020.

Binghamton, the EIWA school in upstate New York, is gunning for their first NCAA All-American since 2012, and current junior Lou DePrez would love to add his name to the list after the former three-time New York state high school champ won the past two conference championships.

Two other past All-Americans are looking to regain the touch that helped them place in the past. One is Nebraska's Taylor Venz, who finished fourth in 2018 but failed to place in 2019. The other is Oklahoma State's Dakota Geer, who started his career at Edinboro before claiming seventh in 2019. Venz was runner-up at the recent Big Tens while Geer is returning to 184 pounds after competing at 197 last winter.

Weight Class Preview

Michigan's Myles Amine has accomplished quite a bit after he earned three All-American honors — 4th in 2017 and third in both 2018 and '19 — at 174 pounds. The Wolverine went on to earn a spot on the (country of) San Marino Olympic team — after he finished fifth in the Worlds — before taking an Olympic redshirt last winter.

This season, Amine was expected to compete at 184 pounds, but after waiting until mid-February to wrestle he has moved up to 197 and hope to capture his school's first NCAA title since Kellen Russell won a second straight in 2012.

One reason for Amine's hope is that he is coming off a 2021 Big Ten championship with wins over Nebraska's Eric Schultz, who was ranked No. 1 prior to the conference meet, and Iowa's 2019 All-American Jacob Warner. Both of those wrestlers grew up in Illinois. The Cornhusker has a combined 4-4 record from two NAAs while the Hawkeye claimed seventh in 2019 and suffered a close loss to Schultz in the regular season.

The Big 12 is sending at least four wrestlers who could make an impact in St. Louis. The first is

Myles Amine, Michigan

Oklahoma State's true freshman A.J. Ferrari, who enters his first Nationals with a 15-1 record and a conference championship. The Cowboy first upset No. 1 seed and previously-unbeaten Tanner Sloan of South Dakota State in the semifinals. Ferrari then defeated Wyoming sophomore Stephen Buchanan, who also qualified in 2020 as a No. 26 seed but made big strides this past winter when he won three matches against West Virginia's Noah Adams, who was 32-0 as a sophomore in 2020.

Two other notable wrestlers at this weight are Arizona State's Kordell Norfleet, who won a Pac-12 title, and ACC champion Nino Bonaccorsi. The Sun Devil, who qualified for the 2018 NAAs before redshirting in 2019, earned a No. 9 seed in 2020. The Panther moved up a weight this season after going 2-2 in the 2019 NAAs and earning a No. 10 seed in 2020.

Gable Steveson already had a famous name before he showed up at the Minnesota campus in 2018 after the Apple Valley native — whose first name came in honor of Dan Gable — had won four state high school championships as well as two Cadet (2015, '16) and one Junior (2017) World championship.

But the Gopher, whose only losses in 2019 came against Penn State's eventual champion Anthony Cassar, turned up the expectations even more this season. Not only will the heavyweight enter his second national tournament with two Big Ten championships, he also recently dominated Michigan's Mason Parris, 12-4, in the 2021 conference final. This is the same Wolverine who also is a past Junior World champion and who only lost 8-6 to Steveson in the 2020 Big Tens.

This weight is one of the tournament's deepest. Other talented big men in the field who also have excelled in international competition are redshirt freshmen. One is Penn State's Greg Kerkvliet, a Cadet World champ and Junior silver medalist, who finished fourth in the recent Big Tens. The other is Arizona State's Cohlton Schultz, who won Cadet year's Olympic Trials.

Meanwhile, Iowa sophomore Tony Cassioppi proved he looks ready to earn his first All-American honor at the recent Big Tens. After getting beat by Parris in the semis, he came back to finish third, shutting out Kerkvliet in the third-place bout.

Three other former All-Americans return. One is Central Michigan's Matt Stencel, who finished seventh nationally in 2019 and recently won a fourth MAC championship for the Chippewas. The second is Lehigh's Jordan Wood, who finished fourth in 2019 nationally and recently won an EIWA championship. The third is Wisconsin's Trent Hillger, who finished eighth in the 2019 NCAAAs.

Meanwhile, Iowa State's Gannon Gremmel, who finished 1-2 in the 2019 NCAAAs and earned a No. 11 seed in 2020, captured a Big 12 championship.

This is the remarkable, untold story of the greatest team you've

THE DREAM TEAM OF 1947

The story of how a small Iowa college upset all the major powers to win the NCAA Wrestling Championship in 1947

By Arno P. Niemand

The wrestling team of Cornell College, a private Methodist liberal arts college with only 415 male students, which won the Division I wrestling championship in 1947, defeating all the major powers in the tournament by a substantial margin. This tiny Iowa college thus became the first school outside of the state of Oklahoma ever to win the team championship since team scores were officially kept; no other private school before or since has done so.

SPRINTING IN THE GRIND

Wrestlers and coaches prepared themselves in different ways during this historically short season

By Mike Finn

Central Michigan wrestling coach Tom Borrelli has a phrase to describe a typical NCAA Division I six-month season for wrestlers who see their seasons end every March with the NCAA Division I Wrestling Championships.

"It's a grind," Borrelli said, "especially if you are a team player and you're trying to have the best team that you can possibly have before you get to the NCAA tournament, which is really what it's about and doing the best you can do individually."

So what would Borrelli — who has spent the past

30 years coaching the Chippewa program — call the 2020-21 season that didn't start until January?

"This is a sprint," said Borrelli, who quickly added an addendum halfway through this historic season. "We're sprinting, but we're also trying to dodge landmines."

All Division I coaches faced a shorter season this winter because of the COVID-19 pandemic that first cancelled the 2020 tournament and created a 2021 dual-meet season that lasted for primarily a six-week period before conference tournaments began the last weekend of February.

Borrelli also referred to the fact that many programs saw many of their dual meets postponed or cancelled when a positive COVID test within a program, or in some cases, other teams within the athletics department forced these wrestling teams to pause. That happened to the Central Michigan program in January when the Chippewas lost five dual meets over two weekends.

"The tough thing is everything so unpredictable," he said. "For example, if a kid tests positive and he's out for 10 days, then you have to change your plan for that kid. That's the tough part because you want everybody to peak at the same time."

And peaking — that point where a wrestler is the

Wrestlers and coaches prepared themselves in different ways during this historically short season most prepared, physically and mentally, as the post-season begins — may be the most critical element in college wrestling; especially this season.

Dan Gable, the former legendary coach who led Iowa to 15 NCAA teams titles between 1978 and '97, has always been a proponent of finding times to peak during the regular season by putting wrestlers against the nation's best, but also giving them times of rest.

Such a season normally included individual tournaments — like the Cliff Keen Las Vegas Invitational, Midlands and Southern Scuffle — in December before taking a break before a dual-meet season in January and February. Then most teams would take off two weeks of competition and train before the start of the postseason in March.

"There are some big peaks and valleys there," Gable said. "And you learn that your distance between peaks and valleys need to be short or close. And the closer you can get, the better you're going to be and the more likely you're going to be ready to go no matter what."

Gable also believes it's important for wrestlers not to look at the shorter 2020-21 season as more of an exhibition season.

"The wrestlers can't look at the season like it's not a big, big deal," he said. "They've got to have it still on the top of the list."

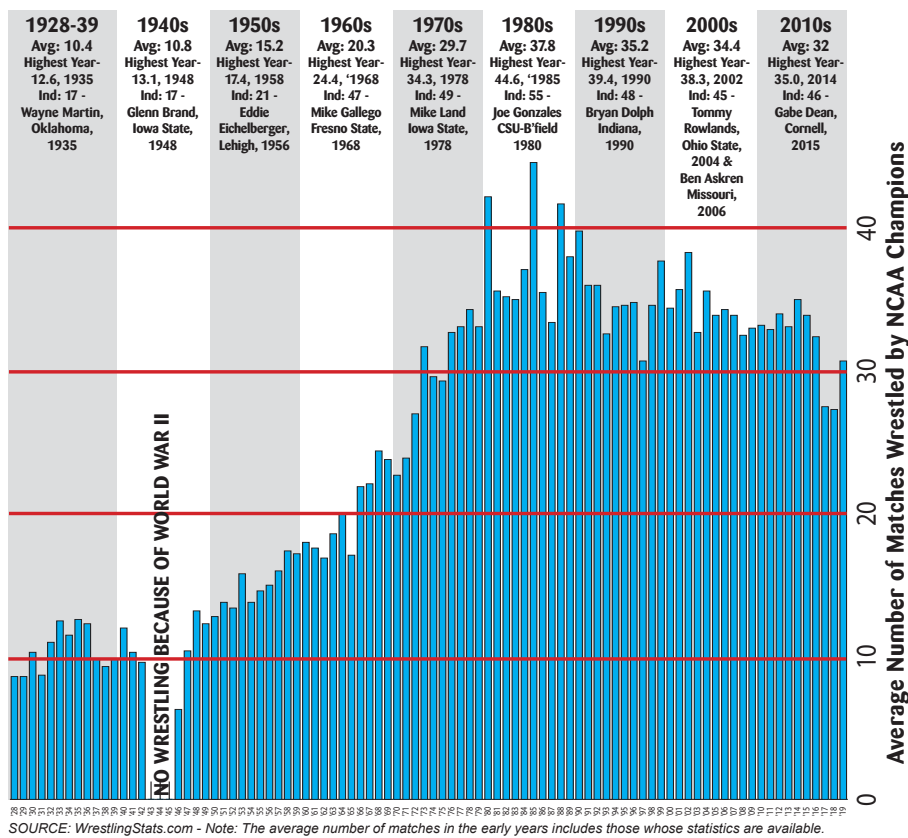

"This is a game of velocity peaking as a mindset," said Iowa coach Tom Brands, who once won three NCAA titles (1990-92) under Gable before taking over the current top-ranked program in 2006. "That is most important in the athlete's mind, where you're talking about peaking or when you're getting ready for whatever is the biggest event."

Most Division I coaches were able to start official practice in October but did not know what their official schedules, which for most teams started in early January, would be until December. There were a few exhibitions and non-collegiate events — like the UWW Juniors and U23 Nationals, held Nov. 13-15 in Omaha, Nebraska — but most of the preparation for this season happened in wrestling rooms.

"We could be in that room and we could be running workouts," said Brands, who eventually tested positive for COVID and missed three of Iowa's eight dual meets in February. "Wrestling without the competition is different, but at the same time, the mindset is the most important thing. We emphasize that continually. We emphasize that in June and July."

Piling up the Matches

The following illustrates the average number of varsity matches that NCAA champions have wrestled in a season since the first national tournament was held in 1928.

Conditioning became a question mark for wrestlers this season.

"In any cardiovascular sport, the base [of conditioning] is so important, but that base takes time," said Ohio State coach Tom Ryan. "We're in kind of a sprint based on our shortened season, there's really no time to back off."

"Making up for lost time is not an easy thing to do. But for the most part, you're up against other teams that are in the same situation. Some people will come out of COVID better, and some people will come out of COVID worse, from a skill and cardio standpoint."

Because of the uncertainty of the pandemic's effect on college wrestling this winter, the NCAA announced that wrestlers needed to compete in just four matches at their NCAA weight in the regular season and that wrestlers could actually qualify without competing in a conference tournament if they tested positive before these NCAA-qualifying tournaments began.

Many in the sport have debated the idea of making it a one-semester sport, and coaches got a chance to experience that idea this year.

"I kind of like the idea of a one-semester sport as long as we can have a dual championship, because I think that's the lifeline to the sport long term," added Ryan, pointing out such a season would still be longer than this year. "We can have home-and-home [schedules] with our big rivals to create events for 16,000 people. There's so many pieces to it, and we can certainly make it happen."

Ryan added that there are advantages and disadvantages to a long college season.

"The more matches you have would suggest there are more chances to find holes in your wrestling; the more chances to fail, the more corrections you can make," the Buckeye coach said.

"Matches in competition prepare wrestlers for the different styles and the different looks they could get from opponents. On the flip side, you look internationally, where some of the best wrestlers in the world don't wrestle a third of the number matches that Americans wrestle in college wrestling, and they wrestle at a very high level."

Ryan, who wrestled 80 matches in his two All-American seasons (1991 and '92) at Iowa, believes more matches also helps develop individual and team rivalries before the postseason.

"With the shortened season, you're adjusting your training to make sure wrestlers peak at the end of the year. You look at what's in front of you. In terms of number of days, you have a number of competitions when you're going to peak, and you set your training."

The 2021 NCAA tournament — where some wrestlers could have less than 10 matches coming into the event — is quite a contrast to past Division I wrestling seasons where the nation's most elite wrestlers averaged between 30-40 matches per year for the past four decades. But there has also been a decline of matches in recent years as wrestlers averaged about 28 matches between 2017-19. (Last year's No. 1 seeds averaged just 22 bouts before the 2020 tournament was cancelled, and the pandemic was not a factor in that.)

Ryan got a chance to see fewer bouts in the career of former Ohio State heavyweight Kyle Snyder, the three-time national champion, who averaged just 15 matches in each of his championship seasons (2016-18). That included just 11 matches in 2016 as the 2015 World champion was also competing overseas while training for the Rio Olympics.

"He was a pretty unique person," Ryan said. "Because of his ability to rest, he didn't waste a lot of time. If you cannot manage your time well, there's increased stress. The human brain cannot assess whether it's real life or not so your heart rate can't be elevated the whole day."

Historically and somewhat ironically, the first NCAA championships — held in Ames, Iowa, in 1928 — were part of the process that decided the United States' Olympic team that competed in Amsterdam that calendar year. And most of those first collegian champions averaged less than 15 matches per year ... up until the 1960s.

"I wrestled in about 20 matches a year," recalled Wayne Baughman, the 1962 NCAA champion and two-time NCAA finalist from Oklahoma. "From the time the season started in December, we did not have many tournaments and wrestled on the weekends. We'd sometimes have like four or five matches in duals [in a three-day stretch], so we got a lot of intense competition."

Ohio State's Kyle Snyder averaged just 15 matches per season while winning titles in 2016, 2017 (above, from the last time the event was held in St. Louis) and 2018.

Baughman later spent 27 years coaching at the Air Force Academy in two different stints (1976-84 and '89-2006) and got a chance to see the college season grow in length as Division I wrestlers eventually competed in as many as 50 matches.

And while Baughman welcomed actual varsity matches, he believed that wrestlers prepared themselves better for the postseason in the wrestling room.

"Your workout room is where you're really going to make or break yourself," Baughman said. "Wrestlers need the matches to help them move up to the next level. But the workout room and workout partners build a wrestler's mentality toward their success."

"I definitely always felt prepared every time I stepped on the mat, and nobody prepared me more than our team. We were fighters."

Baughman also has fond memories of wrestlers of his era. He said many of the top collegians used to make the sport more of a lifestyle where they'd find themselves wrestling wherever they could find high-level competition without seasonal limits.

"They'd wrestle anybody anytime," Baughman said. "They would hear about some guy who was tough [and would wrestle them]. So, there were a lot of unofficial matches back then, and there were fewer official matches. I think they just took advantage of whatever opportunity they had."

No matter how many matches a college wrestler takes place in the regular season, Baughman believes one's success in the postseason comes down to the basics of the sport.

"Wrestling is an individual sport that we can do as a team sport," he said. "You just have two guys with a school affiliation. Basically, wrestling is made up of simple fundamental things. You work your butt off. You learn your skills. You do what your coach tells you. Hopefully you can adapt to what else is going."

"That's one thing that makes wrestling tougher. It teaches you more discipline and focus and all those things ... and how to overcome any big obstacle."

HOST INSTITUTION

University of Missouri, Columbia

Founded in 1839, the University of Missouri, Columbia was the first public university west of the Mississippi River.

The University of Missouri was founded in 1839 in Columbia as the first public university west of the Mississippi River. Today, with an enrollment of more than 30,000 students, 13,000 full-time employees and 315,000 alumni, Mizzou is a $2.2 billion enterprise and an important investment for the state and nation.

MU students represent every Missouri county, all 50 states and 100 countries. Last year, MU was one of only two Southeastern Conference universities to experience double-digit growth in new freshmen. Surging by 13%, the increase represented the second-largest jump in Mizzou's freshman class during the past quarter century.

Based on quality of teaching, research and scholarship, MU is one of only 34 public U.S. universities invited to membership in the prestigious Association of American Universities. AAU membership helps Mizzou attract external funding and recruit top faculty and students.

The state's largest and most comprehensive university, Mizzou has more than 300 degree programs — including 125 online options — through 13 colleges and schools and is one of only six public universities nationwide that has a medical school, college of veterinary medicine and law school on campus.

The university's nationally prominent faculty bring discoveries into the classroom, publish more than 1,600 books and scholarly articles each year and spend $210 million annually on scientific research; they account for about 70% of the research dollars flowing to the state's public universities.

Last year, MU awarded nearly 6,000 degrees and the career outlook for Mizzou graduates is bright. A recent survey shows that 92% of MU graduates have found successful career outcomes, including whether they are involved in public service, in the military or are continuing their education.

Undergraduate research, study abroad, graduate programs, professional schools and the discovery of new knowledge through research add unparalleled value to an MU degree. In the past 11 years, MU students in service-learning courses have served more than 2 million hours and have contributed $46.7 million in positive economic impact to the state of Missouri.

HOST ORGANIZATION

St. Louis Sports Commission

The St. Louis Sports Commission has helped organize and bring numerous NCAA championships to the Gateway City.

The St. Louis Sports Commission is the independent, privately funded nonprofit organization that makes St. Louis a better place to live, visit, work and play through sports. Its efforts focus on attracting, creating and managing major sporting events for the St. Louis region. The organization uses the power of sports to enhance the area's quality of life and create economic and social benefit for the community.

Since its inception in 1989, the Sports Commission has fulfilled its mission by producing high-profile events that generate excitement, revenue and positive exposure for the region. The organization helps make St. Louis a stronger and more vibrant community. It adds to the impact of the area's professional and collegiate teams to make a great sports community even better.

By achieving the highest level of success with its events, the Sports Commission has fortified St. Louis' status as an outstanding sports destination. It has helped organize numerous NCAA championships, including the NCAA Division I Wrestling Championships (nine times since 2000), Men's Final Four, Women's Final Four, Men's Frozen Four, Women's Frozen Four and the Men's College Cup.

Through its affiliated St. Louis Sports Foundation, the Sports Commission focuses on promoting sportsmanship in St. Louis and fostering a culture of kindness, respect, civility and selflessness. Foundation programs also strive to make youth sports more enjoyable and to create positive environments for kids to play sports so they stay active and lead healthier, happier lives.

As part of its commitment to sportsmanship, the Sports Commission manages the National Sportsmanship Foundation and produces the Musial Awards, the most inspiring night in sports. Named for the great Stan Musial, this national event celebrates the year's greatest moments of sportsmanship and those in sports who embody class and character. The show takes place annually on the Saturday before Thanksgiving at Stifel Theatre in St. Louis and for the past two years has aired nationally on CBS. In addition to keeping alive the legacy of Stan The Man, the mission of the Musial Awards is to inspire people across the nation to be good sports.

A catalyst for civic benefit, economic development and charitable good, the St. Louis Sports Commission has been recognized as the national sports commission of the year three times. For more information on the Sports Commission and its events, visit stlsports.org.

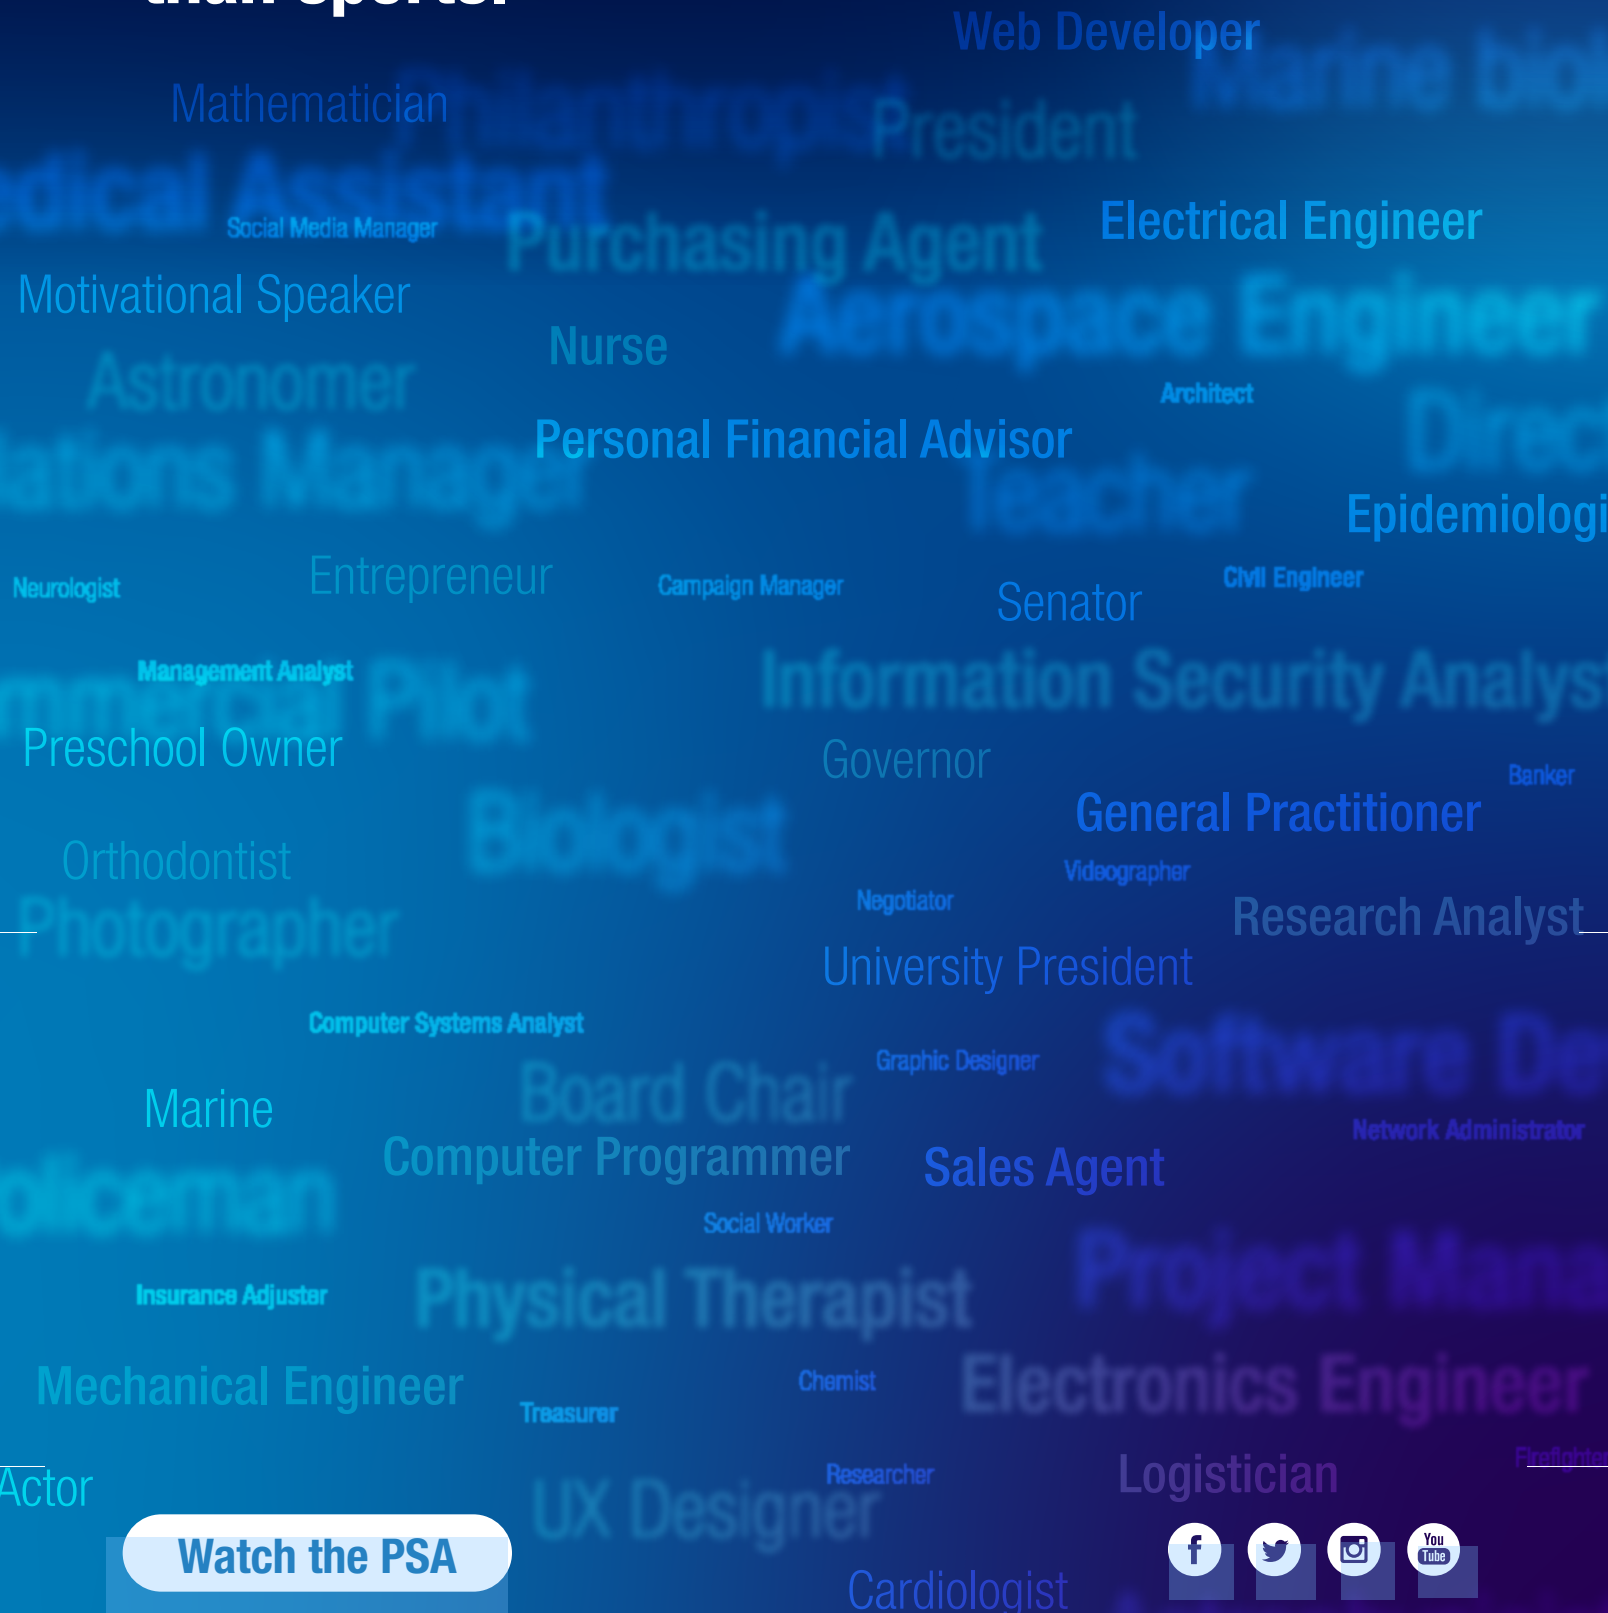

CHAMPIONSHIPS HISTORY

Award Winners

NCAA WRESTLING AWARDS

These awards honor the Most Dominant Wrestler as well as the student-athletes that have accumulated the most falls and the most technical falls throughout the course of the regular and postseasons. For results to be counted they must come against opponents in the same division (i.e. Division I vs. Division II). Ties in the falls and tech falls categories are broken based on the aggregate time.

MOST DOMINANT

Year	Name, School, Weight	Avg. Team Points
2013	Logan Stieber, Ohio St., 133	5.31
2014	David Taylor, Penn St., 165	5.09
2015	Logan Stieber, Ohio St., 141	4.93
2016	Zain Retherford, Penn St., 149	5.00
2017	Zain Retherford, Penn St., 149	5.56
2018	Zain Retherford, Penn St., 149	5.19
2019	Bo Nickal, Penn St., 197	5.20

The award is calculated by adding the total number of team points awarded through match results and dividing that number by the total number of matches wrestled.

Student-athletes collaborate on how to further support and create unity

At a divisive time in the United States, student-athletes stood together.

Across the country, student-athletes from all three divisions used their voices and their platforms to stand for unity and to speak out against divisiveness. Student-athlete leaders took notice and then took action.

Representatives from the three divisional Student-Athlete Advisory Committees and the Board of Governors Student-Athlete Engagement Committee collaborated on how to further support and create unity among the NCAA's nearly 1,100 schools and 500,000-plus student-athletes.

Together, they came up with the national Student-Athlete Unity Pledge and logo.

The logo includes three hands of different colors holding one another's wrists inside a circle with "United As One" at the bottom. In October, the logo was sent to all NCAA schools in the form of a patch to consider placing on uniforms.

The Unity Pledge was carefully crafted to capture the student-athlete perspective on the challenges the country continues to face. Its theme centers on bringing people together to strive to better their campuses, communities and beyond.

"The Student-Athlete Unity Pledge has shown to be an ongoing call for change. Seeing thousands of our fellow NCAA student-athletes accept and promote this pledge is powerfully moving," said Alex Shillow, former chair of the Division II Student-Athlete Advisory Committee and senior football player at Texas A&M-Commerce. "Sports continue to be a hope and unifier of our nation, and with this pledge and patch, our student-athletes have shown that we're committed to being the influential leaders of change."

STUDENT-ATHLETE UNITY PLEDGE

- I am an NCAA student-athlete, and I pledge to be a Champion of Unity on my team, on my campus and in my community.
- I pledge to stand against all forces of division and separation.
- I pledge to embrace differences and strive for inclusion and collaboration.
- I pledge to stand against racism, hate and discrimination.
- I pledge to strive for love, care and forgiveness.
- I pledge to stand against silence, deceit and obscurity.
- I pledge to strive for dialogue, truth and understanding.
- I pledge to stand against fear and doubt.
- I pledge to strive for trust and belief in one another.
- I pledge to stand against complacency and stagnancy.
- I pledge to strive for change and growth.
- I commit to supporting my fellow student-athletes in all circumstances that impact them.
- I commit to both choosing unity personally and encouraging it for all.
- I pledge these things because we are stronger together.

CHAMPIONS IN COMPETITION. CHAMPIONS IN LIFE.

What made them great student-athletes makes them great employees

Every day, millions of former student-athletes from the nearly 1,100 NCAA schools prove the value of college sports, using what they learned in the classroom and their sport. Former college athletes excel as leaders in all walks of life, across diverse professions throughout the global workforce. Celebrating this remarkable community, NCAA After the Game highlights the success these former student-athletes are having in post-collegiate careers and showcases how their experiences in college played a significant role in those achievements.

Also, to help them win in the biggest game of all — life — NCAA After the Game provides networking opportunities via its group on LinkedIn and a career center connecting them to jobs in diverse industries and position levels. Additionally, After the Game includes an information hub on ncaa.org that offers tips to successfully transition to and thrive during the next stage in their journey.

Since 1906, the NCAA has focused on the well-being of college athletes. We are working hard to support their physical and mental health, on and off the field.

DID YOU KNOW?

- We're tracking the impacts of COVID-19 on mental health and how schools can best support college athletes.
- We're working with medical and scientific experts in public health and COVID-19 to establish safe standards for return to practice and competition across the NCAA.
- We've established a phone number [833-661-CV19 (2819)] and email (covidconcerns@ncaa.org) to allow college athletes, parents or others to report potential return-to-sport concerns.

FROM THE DESK OF NCAA PRESIDENT MARK EMMERT

NCAA President Mark Emmert meets with student leaders.

Academics, fairness and health and well-being have long been priorities for the NCAA. Member schools and conferences worked diligently with medical experts to ensure that students were able to have the wonderful experiences that college sports provide in the safest possible way. I am in awe of the resilience our student-athletes have shown to not only make it through this challenging season, but to compete at the highest level while doing so.

Welcome to the 2021 championship season. Though our championships certainly look different this year, the fact that we are celebrating student-athletes as they compete for a national title is an enormous accomplishment.

An NCAA championship is viewed as the ultimate test for a college athlete in any sport. This opportunity was disrupted for thousands of athletes due to the COVID-19 pandemic. We are thrilled to be able to provide this amazing experience to our students once again.

Academics, fairness and health and well-being have long been priorities for the NCAA. Member schools and conferences worked diligently with medical experts to ensure that students were able to have the wonderful experiences that college sports provide in the safest possible way. I am in awe of the resilience our student-athletes have shown to not only make it through this challenging season, but to compete at the highest level while doing so.

The NCAA has worked hard during this unusual time to be flexible and to improve opportunities and support systems for all student-athletes. We have made significant strides, but are not done yet. We continue our work with member schools to ensure that college athletes have as many opportunities as possible. Our goal is that when they leave campus, they leave not only with a college degree, but also as exceptional citizens.

This championship season, we celebrate that our students can again compete safely in the sports they love. We congratulate them for their feats today, for all they have accomplished to be here and for all they will achieve after college.
